ALL AMERICAN ADS of the 70's

Back in Stock! Highly Recommended. By Steven Heller. From Frank Frazetta paintings to psychedelic imagery, Playboy style nudes to beautiful couples in the latest cars and fashions, here is a wide-ranging snapshot of top-tier advertisements for the decade. As television and other media began to compete for advertising dollars, new ideas were incorporated into a post-hippie world where disco clashed with punk, and social consciousness, health and environmental awareness went head-to-head with the Me Generation. Some nudity. Taschen, 2026. Mature Readers.

ALL AMERICAN ADS of the 80's

Back in Stock! Recommended. By Steven Heller. Edited by Jim Heimann. Cover by Nagel. The emergence of the digital world signaled a looming change in the advertising industry. Still cash, cocaine, and Calvins were the staples of flagrant consumerism. With cell phones just around the corner and the death of print in the air, advertisers were still devoting substantial dollars to the outrageous and flamboyant. The "greed is good" mantra on Wall Street spawned the power-dressing, exercise-obsessed "Me Generation" of Yuppies. The art world enjoyed the influx of capital; computers and video games ruled in the office and at home. Leg warmers were big, shoulder pads were bigger and hair was biggest of all. Taschen, 2025.

ALL AMERICAN ADS of the 2000'S

Featuring 10 chapters covering the full range of advertising, from food and fashion to entertainment, business, travel, and automobiles—with special mentions for the worst as well as the best—All-American Ads of the 2000s captures a time when ads still had the power to sell products and dreams in the millions, but mirrored a nation in the midst of profound transition. THE WOMAN WITH FIFTY FACES Maria Lani & The Greatest Art Heist That Never Was

By Jonathan Lackman. Art by Zachary J. Pinson. On April 7, 1928, Maria Lani blew into Paris claiming to be a famous German actress and proceeded to seduce the cultural elite with her undeniable charisma and strangely enticing enigmatic aura. She persuaded fifty artists—Pierre Bonnard, Marc Chagall, André Derain, Henri Matisse, Georges-Henri Rouault, Fernand Léger and Suzanne Valadon among them—to immortalize her in paintings and sculptures, which would appear as an important plot device in a forthcoming film. Unveiled as an exhibition in New York, the art works traveled to Chicago, London, Berlin, Rotterdam, and Paris. But, in 1931, as legend eventually had it, she and her husband Max Abramowicz vanished without a trace, and so did the art. The film was never made. The Woman With Fifty Faces is about uncovering as much of the truth about Maria Lani as possible. Fantagraphics, 2025.

THE SEVEN VOYAGES OF SINBAD THE SAILOR

Fully Illustrated: A Tale from the Arabian Nights. The ultimate illustrated edition of Sindbad, featuring select illustrations from 1800 to 1950. Recommended. Edited by Albert Seligman. Sindbad has been one of the most popular of the Tales from the Arabian Nights since it was first translated from French into English by W. Edward Lane around 1840. This translation was used but edited to modernize the text and eliminate any words or expressions the modern reader may find offensive. It is suitable for family reading, and although there are monsters, they are nicely depicted and not too scary. Dulace Books, 2026.
