On today's show, we're reviewing Disney's Enchanted, which was released in 2008. The movie goes back and forth from animated to live action with some CGI animals.

Let's recap!
Some European fairy tale characters, in the style of Czech illustrator Alphonse Mucha, get magically transported to New York City through a spacey portal full of glitter. They try to find each other before an evil queen witch kills the lead white lady, played by Amy Adams.

I had completely forgotten that there are any cats in Enchanted. The chipmunk, Pip, just takes up so much screentime.

Laughs Skipper, I bet you could hunt down that chipmunk better than the evil queen's lackey! Anyways, those New York kitties really make the most of every second they're on screen – all three of them!

The Asian man they live with doesn't even deign to speak to the strange white guy at his door. That brave fluffy tabby does the talking for the whole household!

Yep -- You don't need to see a dog to know you don't want to see a dog.
There's so many animals in this movie, like all Disney princess movies --

Yes, they usually have little forest critter animals, but no cat friends. Other than Jasmine and Rajah.

I think it's a bias against predators. Like Lucifer in Cinderella. He's just trying to kill the vermin in their run-down old house and he's the villain!

RAY
Yes, we will get to Zootopia. Can't wait!

RAY
Skipper, how do you rate the three-second representation of those two classy city cats in Enchanted?

SKIPPER
Meow, meow

RAY
Two out of four paws – they're good kitties, but there's not nearly enough of 'em!
